

Submission 17

18th March 2005

I read with interest an article on the ABC news website that you are asking why Australians aren't taking up digital TV. One easy answer, it's too expensive. As conventional TV set prices have reduced in the last few years consumers have updated. Our family has a 51cm set which is a few years old. It does the job and we see no reason to change over to digital. We usually only update a TV when it is no longer viable to repair.

Victor Riley