To Joanne Towner

In reply to your invitation to comment on the (TPM) exceptions on the free trade agreement i and quite a few other people have said that there should be no T.P.M.s applied to any american products.. The main argument against any protection for their products is that they want to sell their products here in australia and want us to protect their products at our expence and then take the profits back to America .. The americans gave australia a raw deal when we wanted to import sheep into america a few years ago with import costs etc to protect them selves and their jobs etc and their future and wealth.. So now there should be no protection for anything that the Americans wish to import into Australia and in fact there should be NO freetrade agreement with America at all as well as any American owned company that operates here should have to spend 70% of there profits here in Australia or pay a higher % of tax to the Australian government "

Respectfully
